

Divorced Life

Helen Hanson Fuent

AN ABRUPT DEPARTURE.

Challoner, in the meantime, had paid the boat-house keeper for the damage to the enagge, but by this time recovered canoe, and had at the same time made a straight-forward statement of the circumstances under which the mishap had occurred. The story spread rapidly, and the talk of the inn for a day or two, and then was forgotten amid the new excitement furnished by a tennis tournament which in turn had laid hold of the guests' attention.

Meanwhile, however, Marian had been contriving to keep out of the way of Challoner, slipping away for rambles by herself, or pleading work in her room. Besides, she was certain that some little talk was current, growing out of the fact that she had been seen a good deal in the company of this married man. In justice, not only to herself, but to him, she had resolved that much as she disliked the idea of foregoing this fascinating companionship, it would be for the best to do so.

"I'm sorry that I've made such an abrupt departure of myself," he said to her at last, "as to make you contrive to keep out of my way."

"Why, you've done nothing of the sort," she exclaimed.

"You deny my first allegation, but admit the second," he smiled. "I'm sorry I've ceased to interest you, Miss Whithrop."

"You haven't," she said. "And what's more," she added steadily, "you know you haven't."

He laughed delightedly. "Good," he said. "Then tell me what's worrying you," he continued seriously.

"Let them. Friendship is not listed in the criminal statutes, is it? I know, of course, that there's an absurd unwritten law in the book of Fictitious conventions that a married man should not see or even admit the existence of women in general."

"I am thinking of Mrs. Challoner," your wife," said Marian. "She wouldn't thank me for monopolizing your time and attention, even during her absence abroad."

"You're too generous."

"I've been too selfish."

"What's all this I hear about people talking? What are they saying?"

"One woman has informed me that you're married."

"And what did you say?"

"I told her what a charming woman your wife is, and how devoted you are to her."

"I'm very glad that's understood. I'm glad you understand that I am genuinely devoted to Mrs. Challoner. This being true, what possible objection can there be to our friendship—what intrinsic objection?"

"The objection that in a little place like this, anybody's affairs are everybody's business. Who knows what distorted and incredible stories may reach Mrs. Challoner's ears and cause her unnecessary disturbance?"

"I don't know but you're right," agreed Challoner. Then he added abruptly, "By the way, I am leaving for New York tomorrow morning. It is important that I return there."

"So soon?" demanded Marian, surprised.

"Yes. Shall you be going back soon? Let me know when you return. I'd like to take you to see some of the new plays."

"Tomorrow—Marian Makes Ready to Follow."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctor after doctor has been tried, and all have failed to cure with local treatment, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, produced it incurable. Science has now discovered that Catarrh is a local disease and protracted local treatment, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.
